About British Council:

We support peace and prosperity by building connections, understanding and trust between people in the UK and countries worldwide. We uniquely combine the UK's deep expertise in arts and culture, education and the English language, our global presence and relationships in over 100 countries, our unparalleled access to young people and influencers and our creative sparkle.

We work directly with individuals to help them gain the skills, confidence and connections to transform their lives and shape a better world in partnership with the UK. We support them to build networks and explore creative ideas, to learn English, to get a high-quality education and to gain internationally recognised qualifications.

We were founded in 1934, and our first overseas offices opened in 1938, making us the oldest cultural relations organisation in the world.

Originally, we were called the British Committee for Relations with Other Countries.

Why the British Council was created

The early 1930s were a time of global instability. Britain's influence was weakened because of a global financial depression, which reduced living standards, jobs, and trade.

At the same time, extreme ideologies were gaining ground, with the rise of Communism in Russia, and Fascism in Germany, Italy and Spain.

The UK government created the British Council in response. In our annual report for 1940-41, the aim was:

'to create in a country overseas a basis of friendly knowledge and understanding of the people of this country, of their philosophy and way of life, which will lead to a sympathetic appreciation of British foreign policy, whatever for the moment that policy may be and from whatever political conviction it may spring.'
